

Dallas, Texas - History, Heritage and our Home.

Since 1950 the Leal family has been making tortillas. The Story goes something like this. In the shadow of downtown Dallas, Elvira Portugal Leal made homemade tortilla's in her mother's kitchen. While waiting for her husband to come back from World War II, she sold then to her neighbors and with the encouragement of her father, Torrivio, Elvira decided to open a tortilla factory on the corner of Akard St. in Dallas. After serving four years in the South Pacific Ruben Leal came home to find Elvira with a fledgling business and their first born son, Ruben Jr. Together they built their well known location at 2717 No. Harwood St. where they raised their four sons and taught them the business. They worked hard and made many friends throughout the Dallas community. The Martinez family from the restaurant chain, El Fenix, Luna's Tortillas and many more. When the hit television show Dallas was filmed in the area, show stars Larry Hagman and Linda Grey would come to the factory to have lunch with Elvira and the boys. In the mid 1980's the Leal family was proud to serve tamales and tortillas to the White House and President Ronald Reagan. Times were good for the Leal family. Dallas came to be known as an international city attracting more big business and the neighborhood of Little Mexico began to change. More and more of the old Mexicanos passed on or moved away and their children moved to the suburbs. In 1984 plans were made to expand the business and the Leal family decided to open a second location, this time in Oak Cliff, to reach the growing Latino population. But before the store opened Ruben Leal, Sr. passed leaving Ruben Jr. to head up Dallas Tortilla. The business continued to flourish and soon many more locations were added. Dallas Tortilla and Tamale Factory now has a total of six locations within the DFW area. You can still visit with the Mama Elvira at the Oak Cliff location. Let the tradition live forever!
